February 3rd is Setsubun

Setsubun is the last day of winter and the day before Spring begins.

On Setsubun day, the Japanese people wish for good fortune and good health by throwing roasted beans. This roasted beans are called “fuku mame”, which means good fortune beans.

When the beans are thrown, people shout “evils out!”. They throw the beans from the front door to drive away evil spirits. After throwing beans outside, they shut the door and throw the beans inside and shout “fortunes in!”

Depending on the region, there are various ways to throw the beans. One of the famous places is “Narita San” temple. People only throw beans inward and thus only shout “fortunes in”. This is because the Buddha in this temple has such great mercy that even evil demons give in to him.

There are also differences in the beans. Usually soybeans are used, but some places use unshelled peanuts.

There are various reasons for why these types of beans are used, but some beans seem preferable because you can easily pick up and eat them after the throwing ritual.

If you have a chance to visit on Setsubun day in Japan, please enjoy the Bean-Throwing Festival.

RECOMMENDED SIGHTSEEING SPOT

It's the season for delicious seafood!!

Why don't you select the port town of Hakodate for your next trip?

In winter season, there are many delicious seafoods in Japan, such as oyster, crab, salmon roe, sea urchin, yellow tail and more.

There is a dreamy hotel near the Hakodate port where you can eat as much delicious seafood as you like for your breakfast.

“La Vista Hakodate Bay” was chosen as the best of breakfast in Japan.

Every morning at the hotel, 5 or 6 kinds of seafood are arranged and you can eat as much as you like on rice.

Hakodate also has attractive tourist destinations.

The most famous one is “Fort Goryokaku”.

Goryokaku is Japan's first Western-style fort constructed in 1864. It was the headquarters of the samurai at that time. It is now maintained as a park, and you can enjoy the illuminations in winter.
